I. History

The science of good omens is obscured by fictional accounts
Imposter accountants take room to dream and give back little substance
When it comes down to the wire, underground extinctions become a handful of dust
And the garden of new beginnings is born from the ashes,
A hollow kingdom to the crows, archiving catastrophe as salvation.
In truth, all the pieces matter, and all matter is always left in pieces.

II. Romance Novels, Politics

Quick, take in confidence my confidence
An affinity for you makes her a loner
But she doesn't go into a ten year nap with her sour heart
She's the leading lady, always tipping the velvet to her good side
Her female persuasion is young in dog years but that doesn't change her story
Of flashback hotels and exploded views
She has nothing but the night and room to dream
And she doesn't envy your picket fence diplomacy.

III. Technology, Philosophy, Linguistics

There is no colloquium on the tragedy of robotic death.
No speech can shape something like that, becoming nothing.
We can't talk about it. The history dies too.
You just have to experience it for yourself.
