

In the Court of Justice

The voice, they said, would go unheard
In the court of Justice Waldry the Third;
Poor Justice was blind and could scarcely hear
All the desperate voices in need of his ear.

So the voice made a plea,
A bargain of sorts,
It appealed for the right
To equality torts.

But Justice was struck by protest and uproar;
He'd heard cases like this, by the thousands before!
And despite his dissent, the jury nullified,
So he thought it best that he step aside.

With judicial restraint,
And immunity granted,
The plaintiff was silenced,
Overcome as they chanted.

Most of the jury had some stakes in this game;
At risk were their virtues, their sovereign reign.
The witnesses claimed no tyranny here...
(They were simply projecting their prejudiced fear.)

And they swore on the Bible,
While they perjured through their teeth;
They sang the Sixth libel,
A righteous defeat.
